

2 CARS, TRUCK IN COLLISION; 1 DRIVER HURT

Hanover Man Is Arrested for Failing To Yield Right Of Way.

AUTOS CRASH AT R. R. CROSSING

Dr. Nevin H. Seitz, 30, 215 Carlisle street, Hanover, received a possible fracture of the right knee cap and other injuries in an automobile accident two miles south of Hanover on the Baltimore road Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock when his car was crushed against the side of a truck by a car that drove onto the main highway from a side road.

E. Cole Sunfield, 76, 142 Pleasant street, Hanover, driver of the car that struck the Seitz machine, was arrested for failing to yield the right of way to vehicles traveling on the main highway. The information was laid before Justice of the Peace John W. Dubs, Penn township, York county, by Corporal J. G. Warren, of the local substation of the highway patrol.

The accident occurred as Doctor Seitz was driving toward Hanover. As he passed an intersection with a side road Sunfield is reported to have driven onto the highway and struck the right side of Doctor Seitz's car, knocking that machine against the side of a southbound truck that was opposite the intersection at the time of the first collision.

After the second impact the Seitz machine spun about and came to a stop facing in the direction from which it had come. Both sides of the car were smashed. Damage was estimated at about $400. About $200 damage was done to the truck which was driven by Tolle N. Gill, 35, Sykesville, Maryland. All the vehicles were so badly damaged that they had to be towed from the scene. Damage to the Sunfield car was placed at $25.

Hawn, 22, 138 Third street, Hanover, as the result of an automobile accident at 10:15 o'clock Friday night at Bittinger's station, three miles south of New Oxford on the Hanover road. The charge was laid by Patrolman R. E. Mathers of the local substation of the highway patrol who investigated the accident.

Hawn's machine struck the rear of the car of Paul Stambaugh, 45, New Oxford R. 3, while the latter was stopped on the highway waiting for a train to cross the highway at the station crossing. Hawn stated that he did not see the Stambaugh car in time to avoid the collision. Damage to the two cars did not exceed $25 and no one was injured.

BATTLE RAGES ALL NIGHT FOR TOWN OF IRUN

Government Militia Hurls Back First Assault With Home-Made Bombs.

(By the Associated Press.) Irun, Spain, Saturday, Aug. 29.—A desperate rebel drive to batter down government resistance on the northern frontier raged unabated early today after a night-long battle. At 2:30 a. m. leaders of the defending forces admitted their munitions stores were "dangerously low." Earlier they had conceded the rebels "would be in Irun and San Sebastian in a few hours if the insurgent forces took Fort San Marcial, the battlements which were their first objective. The fort, however, resisted the sustained drive which marked the second pitched battle for Irun during the day. Previously government militiamen had repulsed an attack on the city, hurling home-made dynamite grenades at rebel attackers. Rebel troops, however, reorganized their columns and stormed the road leading to the city from their hillside encampments almost on its outskirts.

Driven at Pistol Point, Claim Deserters, however, from rebel ranks poured across the French boundary. One man arriving in tatters that had been a foreign legion uniform said insurgent officers drove their men against the Irun defense at pistol point and 122 legionnaires in his company of 150 had been killed or wounded.

The almost incessant exchange lasted through the night and the raking fan of fire sprayed across the boundary. Bullets dropped into streets of French border towns and the police warned residents to remain indoors.

Charge Up Mountain After rebel artillery had blasted government redoubts all day long, the fascist forces charged up Mount San Marcial in a final drive to take the city.

They were met by deadly machine-gun fire from a deserted monastery near the city.

Then dynamite-toting Austrian miners hurled their crudely fashioned bombs from trenches. The dead and wounded in the battle were believed to have numbered hundreds.

Although the rebels in their charge up the slope took advantage of every rock and dry wash on the hillside, they were forced to run across many stretches of open ground in full view of government machine gunners and snipers.

Many of the rebels were reported to have been blown to bits by the dynamite bombs which the miners hurled with almost the accuracy of a baseball pitcher.

Government leaders said that many of their men fell from sheer exhaustion across the barricades and that their rifles were immediately taken up by unarmed sympathizers.

What Governors Think of 1938 Reunion Here

No. 9

A reunion of the survivors of the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Confederate Veterans is truly an occasion to attract the attention of all of our countrymen. Of special significance is this reunion because it wipes out all thought of sectionalism which at one time lingered in the minds of the older folks of the north and south who fought, or whose loved ones fought, in the memorable battle of Gettysburg.

As time goes along, the various parts of our nation are being drawn closer together by means of faster transportation facilities. Moreover, the diffusion of thought made possible through the medium of radio has had the effect of making our nation one-minded. In our everyday life we must necessarily depend upon other sections of the country for the fulfillment of our needs, and it seems to me it is only natural that even such a difference of opinion as that which sprung up over the ownership of slaves should melt away. To me the reunion is indicative of a singleness of thought and the creation of a greater united nation.

There are so few of the wearers of the Blue and Gray left that it seems to me a beautiful gesture to combine forces in such a celebration of the 75th anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg.

LESLIE A. MILLER, Governor of Wyoming.

ITALY SETS UP ARMS EMBARGO

Strict Ban Declared Despite Suspicion France Aids Madrid.

Rome, Aug. 29 (AP).—Italy Friday night clamped a tight embargo on all exports of munitions to Spain.

The embargo, which embraced a wide range of materials, surprised political circles in view of a press minister spokesman's statement that Italy needed no embargo, but could control shipments through export permits.

They believed the embargo was declared to clarify Italy's position beyond doubt.

Newspapers continued to accuse France of sending materials to Spain for use in the civil war.

Despite the embargo action, sources close to the government revealed they themselves were suspicious of the effectiveness of French neutrality.

They indicated they would keep a sharp lookout for violations which might oblige Italy to revoke Friday's action.

Press ministry comment was lacking on the British proposal for a London committee to control neutrality embargoes, but high fascists said they would favor the scheme if it would result in effective and complete neutrality on all sides.

$36,801,474 Raised By Presbyterians

Church Contributions Per Capita Are Largest Since Boon Days of 1929.

Philadelphia — Contributions of the local churches of the Presbyterian church in the U. S. A. showed more than a $1,000,000 increase during the year ending March 31, 1936, over the preceding fiscal year.

This is the first year since the boom days of 1929 that contributions have reached such proportions, the Rev. Dr. Lewis Seymour Mudge, stated clerk of the general assembly, reports.

The 8975 local churches contributed $36,801,474 for the year, a gain of $1,082,943 over the preceding year, which had an increase of only $421,304 over the year ending March 31, 1934. From 1929 to 1934 an annual decrease had been reported.

More communicant members were added during the year, both on profession of faith and on certificates of transfer from other churches than in previous years.

Additions on profession totaled 78,207 and on certificate 43,940. The total communicant membership is now 1,959,471 approximately the same as the previous year.

Of the total year's contributions, $25,539,999 was used for local congregational expenses. Gifts to benevolent causes reached $4,852,481. Per capita the churches gave for all purposes $19.18, which is 62 cents more than during the preceding year.

MELONS AS VOTE GETTERS

REPLACE BABY KISSING Dallas, Tex. (AP).—Watermelon feasts are good vote getters, candidates in a recent Texas primary discovered. In fact, they were more popular in Dallas county than kissing babies, orchestras, steak fries or morning coffee. Children and grown-ups—an eighth of a melon to the person with no second helping—cleaned up 185 tons of the juicy, red meat at the expense of candidates during the campaign.

DAY WATERING OF PLANTS OK

Ames, Iowa (AP).—Night watering of plants is more economical, but day watering is not harmful, because less moisture evaporates, says Prof. E. C. Volz, of Iowa State college. Of 100 plants watered every day for two weeks, only the plantain lily was harmed, he reported.

Nobody Pays Rent In Tenant Haven Chicago, Aug. 29 (AP). — For at least ten years that he knew of, 81-year-old William Ihde told Judge Justice F. McCarthy, none of the tenants in the six-flat building where he lived paid any rent—because nobody knew who owned it. But Mrs. Delphina Lance charged that Ihde posed as the owner and tried to have her evicted for non-payment of rent. When Ihde admitted he was not the owner and didn't know who was, Judge McCarthy fined him $100 and ordered an investigation of the mystery building.

RETAINS HORSESHOE TITLE Harold McKenrick, West Middle street, defended his title of horseshoe pitching champion of Gettysburg, Friday evening, by defeating George Martin, Jr., six games to five in a closely contested match on the North Stratton street courts. McKenrick pitched 399 ringers out of 744 shoes while Martin's total was 382. Martin had 99 double ringers as compared with 95 for the victor. Each pitcher scored 60 per cent ringers in their best games.

COCOANUTS USED FOR BALLS BY 'GOLFERS' IN BAHAMAS Detroit (AP).—A strange tale of golf is told here by Howard T. Graber, Jr., of the Junior District Golf association. Graber is just back from a cruise to the Bahama Islands and the Caribbean. It seems that when they went ashore for provisions at Great Abaco island, the golfers among the 16 college students on board had to have a fling at the game. The beach formed the course, whitened bones from shark's jaws were clubs, and coconuts were used for balls.

Robert Francis Erskine, 23, of Bronxville, waving a cheery farewell to paralyzed onlookers, jumped from the 86th floor observation platform of the Empire State building, tallest in the world, and landed with terrific force on the sidewalk below, missing three setbacks. Police are shown removing the body. (Associated Press Photo)

THE WORLD WITH A FENCE

A New Novel by Marian Sims

SYNOPSIS: Carol Torrance's first summer working in Blake Thornton's advertising agency in Atlanta, has proved that she could, if it weren't for Blake's older and selfish wife, come to love her employer, and he her. Just as matters were evening up a little uncomfortably, Ellen Sands asks Carol to be her bridesmaid, and now Ellen is coming to Atlanta to buy her trousseau. It will at least take her mind off Blake's unfortunate position, Carol thinks.

Chapter 32 ANOTHER WORLD

The next week Ellen arrived; glowing and self-conscious; marked by a new and minute diamond on her third finger. They had lunch together, and Ellen detailed her plans further.

"It'll seem awfully funny to go back to Ashboro as a matron," she chuckled. "The first thing I'd like to do would be to go over and thump my nose at Mrs. Taylor."

Carol smiled. "Dear Mrs. Taylor! As a matter of fact I ought to be grateful to her. If it hadn't been for her I might have stayed on another year, just because I was afraid to step out."

Ellen looked keenly at her. "You really like it here?"

"I think I do—as much as anywhere. I don't have much time to think."

Ellen was still eyeing Carol shrewdly. "You look a lot better, you know—as if you'd found something. Are you in love?"

"Oh, Lord, no!" The vehemence of her denial startled them both. Ellen said skeptically:

"Well, don't bite my head off. It wouldn't be so strange if you were."

She shook her head. "I wish I could be. I wouldn't deny it; I'd shout it from the office window."

Ellen's eyes glowed. "It does make you feel that way."

Carol changed the subject abruptly, seeking firmer ground.

"What's the news from Ashboro? Did Mike ever come back?"

"He hadn't the last time I asked Mack. Annabel's started divorce proceedings."

Carol's throat contracted at the thought of Mike. She pushed the thought away.

"What's the rest of the news? Mr. Hudson back this year?"

"Yes. He seems to be a fixture, and Mr. Hall too."

It was only with a great effort that she could remember the school as a reality, existing and functioning even as she existed. Queer, she thought, how places ceased to be when you left them; they were invariably surprised that they went on without you, just as they, no doubt, would be surprised to know that you went on without them.

"Where do you live?" she asked.

"We've taken a furnished apartment at Mrs. Houston's on Market Street for the time being. Living-room, bedroom and kitchenette."

For the time being, Carol's throat swelled at the courage of that phrase; at the youth and hope and fearlessness of Ellen, who could find her heart's desire in a furnished apartment on Market Street, knowing so surely that it was only for the time being. What's wrong with me? she thought desperately: was I born a thousand years old? She forced herself to say enthusiastically:

"It sounds lovely." And suddenly her eyes stung with tears, so that she laughed unsteadily. "I get positively maudlin when I think how happy you must be."

Ellen nodded soberly. "So do I. But of course it won't always be as good as I think it's going to be. I'm not that blind!"

Ellen stayed two days. Days spent in an orgy of shopping for all the traditional trousseau garments. A "white suit," which meant undergarments of white gossamer, and a bridal nightgown. There was nothing of paganism—to Ellen—in the idea of faring forth upon matrimony in virginial white. She was even planning a trousseau tea, at which these intimate garments would be exhibited to a fluttering and envious circle of friends. Carol remembered a remark made by Arnie, the Torrance cook, when she was treated to a similar display.

"Gawd, Miss Mary, Annie had chuckled, 'you sho is plannin' to tempt him!'"

Well, she thought, why not? But she was glad, and ashamed of her own relief, when Ellen went back to Anderson. Ellen was a demoralizing influence for a girl who was trying to keep her mind on advertising.

On Wednesday before the wedding Blake stopped beside Carol's desk.

"What time are you leaving tomorrow?"

She glanced up in surprise, and found his eyes considering her gravely.

"At half-past five," she said. "I think the schedule was arranged especially for me."

"What about your bags?"

"There's only one. I'll leave it at the check room in the morning."

"You can't bring it up on the street car. I'll pick you up on my way in."

She didn't look at him. Does he think of everything? she wondered wildly. Aloud she said:

"Thanks; that would be a help. I was going to take a taxi."

He shook his head. "Rank extravagance. I'll come a little early—about quarter past eight, if that's all right. That'll give us plenty of time. And—I'd be glad to take you to the train."

She wanted to cry: Blake, you mustn't . . . and knew that to refuse his offer would be to invest it with undue significance. And so she accepted.

The girls in the office were excited over the wedding too. They asked innumerable questions, and Freddie begged for a piece of wedding cake to sleep on. "I'll bring you a whole slab," Carol laughed, "and you can all sleep on it—you optimists!"

"And remember all the details," Laura insisted. "So you can tell us about it."

"I'll try. But I'm not very observant about things like that."

She and Blake were silent during the drive to the station. They seemed to have lost the knack of casual interchange, she thought regretfully, and was afraid to speculate on the reason. She tried to tell him goodbye at the Terminal entrance but he shook his head.

"Wait for me while I park."

In a moment he was back. "Give me your check," he ordered, "and I'll get your bag while you're buying a ticket."

There was a disturbing intimacy in a departure like this. In the midst of hurrying strangers you were too completely alone with a companion.

He came back with the suitcase, smiling a little. "I never saw a woman travel as light as this. Irma'd have two bags and a trunk."

"Not for three days, surely. Besides, everything I've got wouldn't fill two bags and a trunk." She gathered up her change and ticket.

"Get a porter for that, Blake."

"No need to." For the barest second his eyes were naked. "I'd rather carry it myself."

He went with her to the Pullman and saw that she was settled.

"What time will you be back Sunday?" he asked.

She was startled. You can't meet me! she almost protested, and realized that he had not suggested it.

"At four-ten," she said.

"Well—" he held out his hand, "have a hell of a good time, Carol, and forget the office."

Tears scalded her eyes again. I am getting maudlin, she thought furiously, and gave him her hand.

"I'll try, Blake. But—well, this sort of thing isn't quite my lay."

"It ought to be. You're getting too bloomin' serious-minded."

The conductor was yelling "All board" in a voice that rolled like thunder under the sheds. He crushed her hand and ran down the aisle as the train lurched.

He was conscious during the drive home of an unwonted lack of purpose in his movements. His existence and his surroundings were gray; grayer even than usual; and the house seemed empty in spite of Irma's presence and his own.

Irma was more difficult in these days than he had ever known her to be. She made frequent mysterious trips to Dr. Freeman's office, and told him nothing of what happened there. She seemed always to be resting, and refused his every suggestion that they go out in the evening to invite people in.

It mattered little to him that she refused, because the suggestions came from a sense of duty and not from his heart. He had an unconquerable sense of disaster impending, and was trying in the only way he knew to ward it off, but he was incapable of fighting it single handed.

He knew the root of his foreboding and still denied his knowledge. The gray fabric of his life was shot through with an occasional golden thread, and though he plucked out the threads and threw them resolutely away they appeared a day or a week later, brighter and more precious than before.

One day, unless Irma stretched out her hand to help him, he would destroy the warp and cling to the bright web—to discover perhaps that what he cherished was after all fool's gold.

KILLS SELF IN 86-STORY LEAP

Young New Yorker Says "So Long, Folks," and Dives 1,050 Feet.

New York, Aug. 29 (AP).—With a smiling "So long, folks," Robert Francis Erskine, a young newspaper reporter, pushed himself from the parapet on the eighty-sixth floor of the Empire state building Friday and hurtled to his death on the sidewalk 1,050 feet below.

Erskine, 23, shot past three setbacks and smashed at the rate of about four miles a minute into the sidewalk on West Thirty-third street.

A half-dozen sightseers in the observation tower floor saw him wave a newspaper, clamber over the ledge and spin out into space.

A photographer had asked the youth, who was a member of a party being guided about the tower, whether he wanted his picture taken.

Erskine nodded in assent and moved back to the parapet.

He thrust one leg over it and sat there a moment. He looked down.

"So long, folks," he said, and leaped, arms outstretched.

The body lunged outward 30 feet, clearing the setbacks in its downward plunge.

In his pockets they found $9 in bills and a watch and chain, but no notes. His grief-stricken father, James, and a brother were unable to suggest a possible motive for the act.

Erskine was the fourth person to be killed in a fall or leap from the building and the first to pass the setbacks and land in the street below.

C. Cass Lawler, 32, jumped from the same floor in August, 1933, and landed on a balcony a floor below. He was slightly hurt.

In April, 1931, a laborer fell to his death from an upper floor to the twenty-first floor extension.

A man died in a leap from the one-hundred-and-third floor, his body landing on a setback, in November, 1932.

"Lucky" Blackiet (above), a California prospector, told Capt. Walter Allen of the Los Angeles police missing persons detail he had met a man with a burro in the San Diego mountains several weeks ago who professed to be Joseph R. Crater, New York Superior Court justice who disappeared six years ago. (Associated Press Photo)

Landon Takes Up His State Duties

Topeka, Kan., Aug. 29 (AP).—Governor Alf M. Landon plunged into an accumulation of state business as republican party chieftains mapped plans for the Kansas to make at least two more presidential campaign tours. He returned early Friday from his first campaign swing through the east.

Arriving at his office after a later sleep than usual, the republican nominee immediately began a series of conferences with Kansas officials. He discussed the drought situation, lunched comparatively unnoticed by fellow-Topekanians in a downtown cafe, and then met with the state parole board.

To reporters Landon said he had no comment on campaign plans announced by John Hamilton, or upon the two-day delay in the Des Moines, Iowa, drought conference. President Roosevelt called for September 1. Aides said detailed plans for the candidate's trip to Des Moines had not yet been formulated.

As for the 2,880-mile swing eastward through eight states which he completed early Friday morning, Landon told reporters he was "deeply gratified" with his first 1936 political drive and "appreciated the friendly welcome of those whom I have had the opportunity of meeting."

Arthur B. Reeve, mystery story writer who died recently, had more than 500 works of fiction to his credit.

An Evening Thought

Our whole life should speak forth our thankfulness; every condition and place we are in should be a witness of our thankfulness. This will make the times and places we live in better for us. When we ourselves are monuments of God's mercy, it is fit we should be patterns of His praises, and leave monuments to others. We should think it given to us to do something better than to live in. We live not to live; our life is not the end of itself, but the praise of the giver.—
R. Libbes.

SIGN OF GREATNESS
Often I see of president or king
This printed tale: "The leader stopped to chat
With men who toil," which sets me wondering
What is there so unusual in that?

"The nation's head was pleased a boy to greet.
Asked him his name, and bade him
to be true!
Talked with an apple woman on the street!"

Is this too much for men in power
to do?

Must mortal man outgrow such simple things.
Deeds greatness 'gainst its fellows build a wall.
Have men forgotten that the King of Kings

Walked with poor fisher folk and talked with all?

Half-Million Loss,
One Dead as Gale
Hits Terre Haute

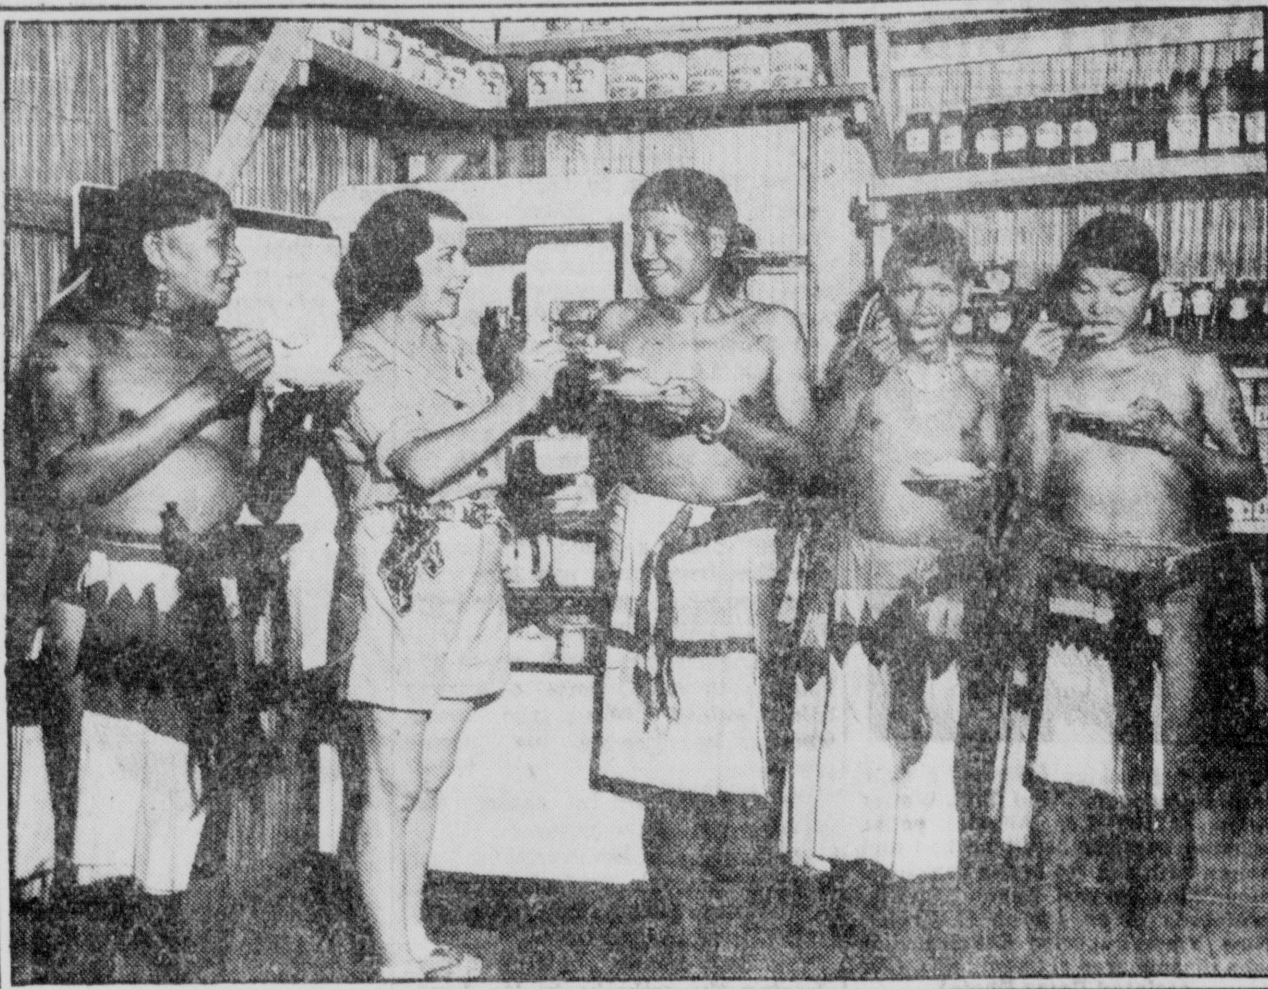

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 29 (AP)—
City Engineer Robert Paige estimated Friday night that a heavy wind storm, which killed at least one person, and injured at least two others, had caused "between $500,000 and $700,000 damage."

The gale, reaching a fifty-six-mile-an-hour intensity, uprooted trees and utility poles and damaged homes, business houses and automobiles.

Debris filled the streets, and many parts of the city were darkened when electric wires snapped.
Hundreds of persons fled from theaters when the lights and power suddenly went out.

Fire and police officials found difficult an immediate check on those hurt. The fire department answered more than twenty-five calls as live wires fell in the storm area.

Bobby Baker, 6, was killed instantly when a tree fell upon a tent in which he was living. His mother, Mrs. Bertha Reynolds, suffered a fractured back and arm and was taken to a hospital. Miss Hazel Ferguson, about 27, daughter of County Recorder Leslie B.
Ferguson, suffered severe cuts on the face and arms when a window in the courthouse caved in on her.

Natives of Borneo Jungles Taste
Their First Ice Cream... and Like It

Mrs. Martin Johnson, who with her husband is famous as a motion picture explorer in tropical countries, is shown in the above picture with native helpers around the Johnson camp on the banks of the Kinabatangan River in North Borneo. The natives are having their first taste of ice cream. Any one can see how delighted these childlike jungle-dwellers are with the treat.

When Mrs. Johnson isn't busy helping Mr. Johnson film the sound pictures of wild animal life with which the jungles of Borneo abound, one of her pastimes is making ice cream. She decided to invite the natives to try this typical American dessert.

Mrs. Johnson got a lot of fun out of the event, and the natives liked the ice cream so much that they kept asking for more.

This ice cream feast in a dense tropical jungle where the weather is perhaps hotter than anywhere else in the world was made possible because, odd as it may seem, the Johnsons' grass dining hut is furnished with refrigeration just as up-to-date as that of any city home in America. The camp is equipped with two Electrolux refrigerators made available by the Service Company of Evansville, Indiana. Because of the remoteness of the Johnsons' camp, kerosene is used to operate the refrigerators. One refrigerator is used for preserving food, cooling beverages and making desserts, and the other for keeping photographic chemicals at even low temperatures.

The Borneo expedition is sponsored by the American Museum of Natural History. The films will be shown in motion picture houses when the Johnsons return home next year.

Today's Talk

By George Matthew Adams

FEAR—THE WORST PARTNER

THERE are certain people who could not possibly succeed as partners.
For instance, a dishonest man and an honest man could not win together for each would be repugnant to the other. The honest man would have to take a share of his dishonest partner's gains, which would make him dishonest.

There are partners and partners, however—but the worst of all, perhaps, where one's life happiness is concerned, is that of Fear. You cannot win with Fear.

Absolute faith is fearless. Complete confidence in one's ability knows no fear. The moment that fear enters into an action, that moment the action loses its stability and its driving power. The man who feels in his heart that he cannot fail, will not fail. A man always fails within himself.

You cannot win with Fear!

There is an atmosphere about the man who courts no fear. He is dominant. He knows his own mind. He may make one, yes, a thousand mistakes—but he pays no attention to them, excepting to profit by them and use their memory as danger signs on the way ahead.

The man who is afraid to go ahead, of course never goes ahead—or anywhere, for that matter. He just shuttles.

To know your danger is not to fear, even though you walk into it white of face.

A healthy mind and a clean heart—a body kept in natural order—leave no room for fear to enter and take command.

Fear acts as poison. It can wreck the strongest who give in to it. The child, with the strong hand of its father tightly holding its small hand, has little or no fear because it has confidence. A strong character is forever fortifying itself against fear.

Reply to Landon
Made by Robinson

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 29 (AP)— Senator Joe T. Robinson, democratic majority leader charged Friday night republicans are "staking their last hope on their ability to frighten the consumer."

Lashing back at Governor Alf M.
Landon's attack upon administration tax policies, the New Deal wheelhorse asserted President Roosevelt "is handling the fiscal policies of the government with concern for the needs of humanity and with approved regard for the federal credit."

He accused the republican presidential nominee of seeking "to alarm the man of moderate means by hinting that the country is overburdened by huge public debt that must be paid by those of moderate means."

Replying to Landon's "wasteful spending charges made in a Buffalo address earlier this week, Robinson said in his radio speech that the governor's only definite and concrete pronouncement as to policies he intends to pursue if elected was a pledge "to slash the taxes on large corporations."

REMEMBERING
Aunt Clemmie

GREAT-AUNT CLEMMIE was brought up to the Spartan life. She enjoyed (she always said) getting up at five on a Saturday morning, hanging her market basket over her arm, and going downtown to do the marketing for the week-end. She said, "If you get there first—you'll get the best!"

Aunt Clemmie is a fine reminder of her time. Nowadays one needn't rise with the birds to be sure of a full market basket. It's so much simpler and more efficient to spend a few minutes with the advertisements. Marshalled before you, in your newspaper, is all the news that is necessary for your good living. There, in the advertisements, are facts—sound, solid facts—about prices and quality. Advertised, trade-marked merchandise must be honest merchandise. Or it wouldn't be advertised.

STANDARD FOR POTATOES SET

Growers to Seek Market Close To Home; Stores Promise Co-Operation.

A new potato marketing and grading program will be set in Pennsylvania, Donald M. James, head of the division of fruits and vegetables of the bureau of markets, has announced.

Plans and grading specifications were approved at a meeting of officers of the Pennsylvania Potato Growers' association, representatives of Pennsylvania State college and the department of agriculture, James said. He added the plan had the support of the distributors.

Grading schools will be started at potato centers of the state to train inspectors. The organization will be sponsored by the growers' association and will be supervised by the bureau of markets.

Men trained in the schools will inspect, pack and grade potatoes sold in the association in trade-marked bags. Grade specifications will be in three classifications:

Blue label, high standard quality and size. Red Label, equally high quality, but medium size. Yellow label, lower quality, but acceptable as good merchantable stock.

James said Pennsylvania dealers indicated they will give preference to state-grown potatoes. James said Pennsylvania dealers, both chain store and independent, will meet next Wednesday in Harrisburg, to review the new marketing set-up.

Timely Reminders for Adams County Farmers From State College Agricultural School.

Control Cabbage Aphids

If the first plants attacked by the cabbage aphids are removed and destroyed, often the farmer will not have to resort to contact sprays or dusts. A two or three per cent nicotine dust applied thoroughly on a warm day will kill the aphids. Early application will make the control easier.

Prevent Bee Robbing

During the summer when no nectar is available, bees may become honey robbers. As little work as possible should be done with the bees then, and honey should not be exposed which will start robbing, says the Penn State bee specialist.

Have Quality Corn

Three steps will help to get quality in sweet corn. Sweet corn should be pulled in the milk stage when the sugar content is highest. Early morning when the corn is cool is the best time to pull it. If the corn must be kept until the next day it should be placed in a refrigerator with the husks on.

Potatoes Face Danger

A late blight epidemic on potatoes is possible when there is prolonged wet weather in late summer. Loss or injury from such an epidemic can be prevented by weekly spraying with bordeaux mixture containing 8 pounds of lime and 8 pounds of copper sulphate in each 100 gallons of water.

Improve Old Meadow

Where the farmer has left his drouth-injured seeding without re-seeding, he may inspect it next spring. If it then appears hopeless, he can hold the old meadow over for another crop. An application of 125 pounds of nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia and 125 pounds of superphosphate an acre applied as the growth starts in the spring will help to make the old meadow a paying proposition.

COACH'S PROMOTION COSTLY

Oklahoma City (AP). — The promotion of Biff Jones, football coach at the University of Oklahoma, from captain to major, cost him $5.40. When kidded about how much money he would make after his promotion, Biff replied: "Huh, I'm out $5.40 for new insignia for my uniform. You get paid according to length of service rather than rank in the army."

MISSIONARIES FLEE CHINESE

About 50 Americans Reported In Area Menaced by Red Raiders.

Shanghai, Aug. 29 (AP).—Foreign missionaries, including many Americans, fled Friday before a communist army surging eastward from Kansu to Shensi province.

It was estimated about one hundred missionaries, of whom about half are believed to be Americans, are scattered through the province on Tibet's border. Many of them hurried toward the city of Lanchow, although the capital of Kansu province itself was known to be the Red army's objective.

Communications with Lanchow, far inland in North China, were meager and infrequent. They did not state the number of missionaries who had arrived from the outlying districts, but it was estimated about a dozen Christian Missionary Alliance workers, with headquarters in New York, had arrived.

Among the many not accounted for were the Rev. Stanley Harrison and Mrs. Harrison, who had been stationed at Pehsto on the northeast border of Tibet. Colleagues in Lanchow were alarmed, Lanchow advices said, because if the Harrisons had started they must traverse an area infested with roving bands of Reds. The Rev. Mr. Harrison is from Corning, New York, and his wife from Scranton, Pa.
